MOTTO: "You Want To Live Forever?"

The Prince's Men are a ragtag group that formed following Duke Sandoval's declaration of loyalty to House Davion. Culled from disparate military units - known and unknown - it is filled with thrill-seekers and opportunists.

Though they are all military men, their training and expertise vary wildly, running the gamut from hard-core veterans to wet-behind-the-ears greenies. Regardless, they all like the uniform - and, more important, they like the standard-issue big guns that come with the job.

Though many of these men and women are actually loyal to House Davion, there is no doubt that others simply see this as their best chance to get on the winning side of the war everyone knows is coming. Duke Sandoval, however, is willing to ignore this provided they do not cross any lines, as they have proved their worth to him several times.

Though their wild, disorganized nature has at times put them at odds with some of their fellow units - especially the Davion Guards - and makes them slightly unsuited to complicated missions, they are consummate scrappers and would not hesitate to throw themselves into meat grinders if that is what it would take to carry the day.
